

THREE KINDS OF COURAGE

Said Dr. Hawthorne at the Southside Baptist Church.

PHYSICAL, MORAL, MENTAL.

All Three Essential to the Ideal Man—The New Woman Comes in for a Roast.

Rev. Dr. J. B. Hawthorne of Atlanta lectured at the Southside Baptist church last night to an audience that filled the auditorium of that handsome edifice. Dr. Hawthorne has preached here several times in the past, and each time has drawn a large crowd. The lecture last night was under the auspices of the young men of the church, and no charge was made for admission. At the conclusion of the lecture a collection was taken up for the benefit of the church.

The subject he discussed was "Courage," and this subject he treated under the three subdivisions, physical courage, intellectual courage and moral courage.

He said courage in olden times was looked upon as synonymous with virtue, and a brave man was supposed to possess the attributes of a great man. In the present day a courageous man is admired by all men. He spoke of candidates for office who have no courage to differ with the majority of the voters in their district. He said no magnificence surpasses the magnificence of a battle-scarred face. He said he had never seen a man who was constantly and consistently courageous. He said he could show up one side of the man as heroic and courageous, and the other as almost pitiful. He illustrated this point by referring to a man he knew who had the physical courage to fight a lion, whose valor, he declared, was exceeded by nothing in the history of war, yet who had no intellectual and moral courage with no opinions but those of a majority of the people in his vicinity. If a majority of the people should decide that the man in the moon was the proper person to worship he would throw aside his Bible and worship accordingly.

The "new woman" was unmercifully scored by the lecturer, who said he had the day before, for the first time, seen an Alabama woman on a bicycle, and he blushed for his native state. The lecturer, he said, weighed not less than 240 pounds. He had no respect for the woman who departs from the paths of propriety and tries to imitate man.

He spoke of the man who had the physical courage to do almost anything, to face the cannon, bayonet, the mob, yet whose knees trembled at the approach of his wife, who had donned the habits of the subjugated husband. He said there was some weak spot in every man's heart, some spot where fear penetrated it. He said the ideal modern man is one in whose character are blended all types of courage.

No man, he said, is strong without a good degree of physical courage. He illustrated physical courage by referring to General Forrest, who refused to be put under the influence of opiates while a bullet was being cut from his leg. He said when General Jackson's command was making the advance on the federal army at Chancellorsville the Third Alabama regiment was thrown into the thickest of the fight. Not less than half the command had been killed, and in the midst of the storm of bullets the regiment began to waver. A young Alabamian rushed in and picked up the flag and floated it aloft and in so doing lost his life, but saved the day. If man has nothing but physical courage, said the lecturer, he is not worthy of respect; he is no better than the bear.

He said the professional slinger was contemptible, and those who train their physical powers merely for gambling purposes were not as worthy as the builder, and those who sing their praises still less worthy.

Thinking Courage.
The next subdivision Dr. Hawthorne discussed was thinking, or intellectual courage. That he described as independent, thorough and honest investigation. He said a great many people read all the time, but never have a thought of their own. He said there are whole regiments of people who know philosophy, but who have never attempted to solve one phenomena of mind or matter. The majority, he said, base their opinions on the opinions of their associates. He said he had no respect for a man whose opinion was formed by the opinion of a great number of others, and who never attempted to think for himself. He said he believed this republic was destined to democratize every monarch on this planet.

He said the men who think are the greatest benefactors of the world, and illustrated this point by pointing out the benefits the railroads, telegraphs and other inventions had been to the people.

Moral Courage.
All moral courage, he said, had for its basis a rational and just purpose, and to do what we know to be right. He said the truest honor a child could confer on his parents was to thoroughly and honestly investigate the truth. He said the present financial condition of the country was due to the lack of moral courage in our officials. He said they did not have the moral courage to confront them, but were intent on keeping within party lines. He said if Jackson and Calhoun were to rise from the dead and reappear in American politics they would see nothing to raising their heads from the ground. If they were to walk through the halls of congress they would see nothing in the spotted congress to remind them of the party they made. Both parties, he said, were just alike in this respect. The leaders are lacking in moral courage.

Dr. Hawthorne concluded his lecture by saying that we cannot crave for ourselves anything greater than to emulate the lives of great men and women who had lived and died for their country and their people.

SIX MEN LOST THEIR LIVES

AND TWO VALUABLE HORSES BURNED

Fire in a Livery Barn at Detroit, Mich.—Remarkable Escape of Seventy-Two Horses.

Detroit, Mich., July 10.—A fire started in Chase's livery barn, a four-story brick structure, No. 41 Congress street, shortly after 2 o'clock this morning. Two hours later, when the firemen had succeeded in gaining control of the flames, the barn was a complete wreck. Five men at least had either been burned to death or smothered. One was fatally injured by jumping from the burning building. Two horses were burned to death and $60,000 worth of property destroyed. Seventy-two horses stabled in the basement escaped the fire.

Six men lost their lives in the fire. All were employees of the stable, and slept on the fifth floor. One man named Cummings became excited, and, after throwing his clothing from a fifth story window, leaped out himself and landed among the firemen, who were putting up a ladder to save him. His skill was crushed, and he is probably fatally hurt. Five others were suffocated or burned to death in their rescue. The sixth man had apparently tried to escape, but had pitched head first down a hay chute. His body was found in the basement creel, but standing on his head in the chute with his skull flattened out.

Strangely enough, of the seventy-two horses which were stabled in the basement not one was injured. This was owing to the solidity of the floor above them. They were found standing in about 3 feet of water, and were all removed safely.

Mr. Chase, the proprietor of the stable, estimates his loss at $60,000, and the loss on the building is about $30,000 more. The two valuable horses burned were Ethel G. and the pacer, Little Mac, with a record of 2:13 1/4. Belle Isle, another trotter, was badly burned.

TWO YOUNG FIENDS.

One Murders His Grandmother and the Other Assists in Hiding the Crime.

Detroit, Mich., July 10.—Late yesterday afternoon George Chesbro confessed that he was the murderer of his grandmother, Mrs. Leve Pierce. He claimed that his grandmother became suddenly offended at some trivial thing which he did and that she attacked him with a knife and that he killed her in self-defense.

Mary Pierce, the 13-year-old daughter, however, broke down and confessed that the killing was unjustifiable. Mary and her mother were having a wordy quarrel, and George, she claims, interfered and struck his grandmother several blows with a stove poker. Not satisfied with this he sprang at the old lady, caught her by the throat and throttled her to death. Mary did not interfere. Instead she assisted Chesbro in his attempt to clear up evidence of the struggle. The floor was mopped and the murdered woman's head washed to clean the blood marks, but the finger marks on the throat and the terrible cut across the cheek could be obliterated, and the two young friends gave up the attempt after working twenty minutes over the body.

It was the intention to claim that the old lady fell dead as if from heart stroke, but as the marks of violence were too plain the story of tramps in the neighborhood was concocted. Chesbro expressed no regret for his deed. Mrs. Pierce was a woman of violent temper, and she was known to punish her children and even her husband unmercifully. Mr. Pierce appears to mourn but little, and it is the impression that he is glad his wife is dead. The young murderers have been bound over to the circuit court for trial.

TALES OF THE TIMES.

He Helped a Wheelwoman in Distress, but Will Never Do It Again.

"I have made up my mind that women are pretty well able to take care of themselves when they go out on a bike, and the next time I see one tangled up with the spokes of her wheel I will let her untangle herself," declared Harry Monahan of the Olympic club wheelmen.

"I was spinning along a road in Alameda county that winds along a creek a few days ago, when I saw a woman coasting ahead of me. Her machine commenced to wobble, and I saw she had lost control of it. Then there came a wild scream, a whirl of navy blue, and machine, woman and all disappeared over the embankment into the creek.

"I dashed down to the scene of the accident, left my wheel on the bank and started to scramble down to the dump of briars where the woman was struggling, with her wheel on top of her. I slipped and fell into the creek up to my neck, taking about eight square inches of skin off me as I slid. When I took hold of the machine to lift it off the woman, she commenced floundering like a horse that is down under a wagon and twisted two of my fingers nearly off in the spokes of the wheel. After 15 minutes' work I managed to get her and the machine back upon the road. Her machine had not suffered so much as a bent spoke, she did not have a scratch or a bruise on her, while I was wet through, skinned and bruised all over, had my fingers wrenched and—some one had stolen my wheel while I was down in the creek."—San Francisco Post.

Reassured.

A dilapidated specimen of manhood who was leaning hard against a telegraph pole in the neighborhood of the stockyards yesterday morning, with his eyes tightly shut, called out to a man whose footsteps he heard approaching:

"Say!"

"Well," said the other.

"Have you got a minute or two to spare?"

"I reckon."

"Would you mind just looking inside the fence right there where that board's broken off and telling me if you see anything on the ground?"

"No objection at all, sir. I see two dead rats."

"Anything peculiar about them?"

"Nothing except that they are whoppers. They are two of the biggest rats I ever saw."

"Anything else near them?"

"No—yes; there's a queer looking snake."

"Is it alive?"

"It's all dead but its tail. That still wiggles."

"Is it a green snake that looks as if it had swallowed a baseball?"

"Yes."

"Got a queer looking stripe down its back?"

"Yes."

"Then it's all right," rejoined the dilapidated citizen, straightening himself up, opening his eyes and walking on.

"You have done me a great kindness, mister. I was afraid I'd got 'em again."

Reckless Thoughtlessness.

The judge of a western court, in order to secure a safer and more civilized condition of affairs in the courtroom, asked the 12 jurymen and the 10 attorneys present to place their pistols in a pile in the corner of the room, but there seemed to be some hesitancy in complying with the request, and the judge insisted.

"If your honor will put his down first," suggested the foreman of the jury, "I guess the balance of us will follow suit."

"Certainly, gents," replied his honor and laid his gun down in the corner.

In a few minutes all the others had done the same, excepting the sheriff and his deputy, who were not included, and 23 pistols were reposing peacefully on the floor.

"Now, gents," said his honor, suddenly whipping out a gun, "the first man that goes snoring first shall sit in the neck."

In an instant every man's hand went to his other hip pocket, and as his honor dived behind the desk 23 bullets went through the window back of where he had been sitting, and 22 men were waiting for him to stick his head up, but he did nothing so rash.

"Put up them guns," he yelled, "put up them guns or I'll fine every d—d one of you for contempt of court!"—New York Sun.

A Woman Sings.

Mr. Richard Stevens, 512 South Ann street, is dangerously ill at his home from internal injuries about the chest, which he received on Sunday night by a wagon falling upon him. Mr. Stevens attended the opening of the Monumental Social club shore at Walnut Grove, Bear Creek, and left there on Sunday night to come home by riding on top of a wagon.

On the shell road, near the first tollgate, the wagon upset, and Mr. Stevens was thrown beneath it. For several minutes the whole weight of the vehicle rested upon his breast. Several men made strenuous efforts to get him out, but could not move the wagon.

Finally a German woman of muscular build came along, and seeing the predicament of the man under the wagon she went to the assistance of those who were attempting to rescue him. With the strength of a Hercules she raised the wagon up and held it until Mr. Stevens was pulled out. The injured man was sent home and attended by Dr. Gately, who says his condition is serious. Last night Mr. Stevens was unable to lie down and had to be propped up in bed.—Baltimore Sun.

Outran the Marshal.

Marshal Griffith of Lawrenceburg, Ind., had a funny experience in capturing a prisoner the other day. He set out to arrest Minnie Willman. When the woman saw him coming, she ran. The marshal set out in hot pursuit, but after a few blocks he became winded, while the woman was far in the lead.

The panting marshal spied Jack Montooth, a sprinter of local fame, who was rushing breathlessly over to Montooth. The marshal swore him in as a deputy on the spot and sent him after the fleeing prisoner. Montooth caught up to her in a few minutes. The woman turned on him and knocked him down with a bowlder. Just then the marshal came bowling along and arrested her.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

This means that good times are here again.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Little did we think years ago when Dr. Holloway, our great southern specialist, located in Birmingham and modestly announced through the columns of the Herald that he would treat only a special class of diseases that he would ever achieve an international reputation. To our personal knowledge from across the ocean, in far away England, they have learned of his skill and fame and consult him. We believe with the doctor that truth, merit and honor always win. He stands at the head—a pleasant gentleman, an able physician—and is recognized as the leading authority in the treatment of all private diseases. Birmingham may well be proud of him.
